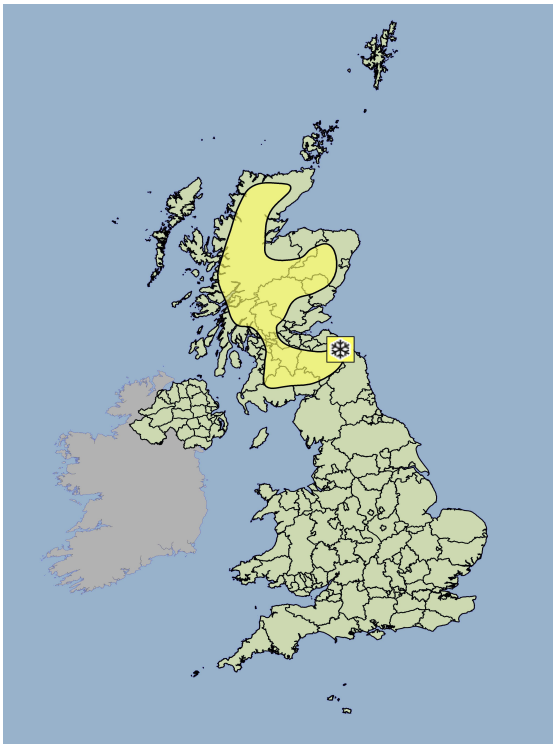
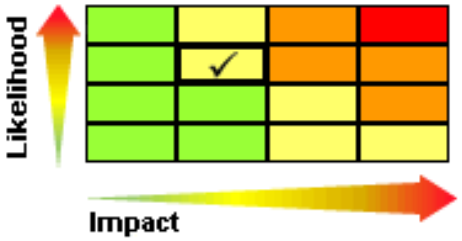
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A frontal system will cross the UK from west to east on Tuesday. As it encounters colder air across northern Britain, a spell of snow is likely. This will be mainly focused across high ground, but some wet snow is possible at low levels for a time. There is some uncertainty over the track and intensity of this weather system and hence this Alert is likely to be updated on Monday.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Snow

Valid from 03:00 on Tue, 11th Feb 2014 until 15:00 on Tue, 11th Feb 2014

A band of rain, sleet and snow will spread east across Scotland on Tuesday morning. Most of the snow will be on high ground above 200-300 m where 5-10 cm may accumulate in places, but there is also a risk of some wet snow to low levels. Clearer weather with wintry showers will follow from the west later in the morning, these showers again bringing some accumulations, especially over high ground. In addition, as temperatures fall in the evening, icy stretches will form on untreated roads. Drivers are advised to take extra care and be aware of the possibility of some difficult driving conditions and some minor travel disruption.
